Deconstructing the Specification Section

Want to learn how a professional specification writer goes thru the process of selecting a building material or a building system to achieve the desired design then come to our July dinner meeting.

Neal will discuss his method and process of working with the design team starting from the initial product selection and leading ultimately to a body of work that is integrated into the project design.

Neal is one of the major specification writers here in the islands and architects and engineers will have the opportunity to observe his method of dissecting a product as he goes thru his process of reviewing products and ultimately select a product to meet the desired design results. Product representatives will also find it useful in what details are important to a specification writer as well as the overall process that goes into selecting a product.

Neal Lebsack Biography

Neal Lebsack, CSI, has been bidding from and building from, reviewing, or preparing specifications for 40 years and has served as Specification Manager at Architects Hawaii for 18 years. He is a graduate of Columbia School of Architecture and has been a registered architect since 1978.
